

The Voice of Physicians in Clinical IT Adoption

Introduction to Clinical Information Technology for Hospital Trustees

Typical hospital directory boards are comprised of trustees who have enjoyed success in a wide variety of industries and professions - often unrelated to healthcare. And yet hospital trustees have the fiduciary responsibilities associated with the investment of millions of dollars in clinical information systems - a realm of foreign terminology and eponyms, complicated feature-functionalities, and technical complexities. CIH provides a series of structured presentations to bring clarity and basic understanding to the world of clinical information systems, as well as the challenges associated with achieving acceptance of the institutional clinical staff.

Champions in Healthcare works with all segments of the healthcare industry—hospitals, vendors, payers and providers to provide the voice of clinicians in successful adoption of developing technologies by clinical end-users. Hospital trustees must have an clear understanding of the issues that impact their sizeable investment in clinical technologies and the challenges to their successful applications and utilization.
